Chapter 1 by Lefian

In this story, wage against either the most illogical or simple and bland post to answer the opposing question, and solve the puzzle that lies beyond. Example:

You find yourself in a room

By: Frenobody

Throw the pigeon across the wall. -79 damage.

By: Lisanonymous

Take the vaaz.

By: Pedrovocative

Search around the room.

Now, unto the serious game-guiver.

Note that this is my first "Story", so plees B nise.

You find yourself in a room. What do you do?

Chapter 2 by Kitiðn   ✎

Alternately if you say Cogito ergo sum, the safe conclusion is "I am thinking, therefore I exist". The room may not exist, but at least you know that your real.

The last alternative is less philosophical, and that's just find the door.

Chapter 3 by intellikat

Throw the pigeon across the wall. -79 damage.

Chapter 4 by Cora Aquila

The pigeon ricochets off the wall and hits a green pig, who was standing on top of a wavering structure made of wood. It all goes down. -100 damage.

Chapter 5 by Josh Van-duh Wally

The pig bursts into flame, igniting the wood scraps that once held it aloft.
The room is on fire. You are on fire. -10 damage / sec.

Chapter 6 by Rinat Menyashev

At least it's much lighter and you can look around
Good choice of early impressionists on the walls. Oh, Paris, je t'aime

Chapter 7 by Selena Raynee

Suddenly, you notice an elephant in the room...
